

Science on the Hill: Portable MRI might make the world a better place

August 9, 2015

Science on the Hill: Portable MRI might make the world a better place

by Michelle Espy

Science moves forward in surprising ways. Sometimes researching one problem solves another you weren't even thinking about. Consider the winding path our team at Los Alamos National Laboratory took from brain-imaging research through explosives detection to developing a simple magnetic resonance imaging system that might help sick children in Uganda.

This article first appeared in the Santa Fe New Mexican.

Managed by Triad National Security, LLC for the U.S Department of Energy's NNSA